My only negative comment is: they have right on them the family of instruments they belong in, but they categorize the harp as a percussion instrument. I can live with them calling the piano and organ percussion, but not sure how the harp isn't a string instrument. They also include the conductor. Really nice. I would still recommend them.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. all well and good. If you're looking for accuracyBy George MarkeyWell, the harp (String family)' and the organ,( family) are both under the percussion family in this one. If you need pics of the instruments,all well and good. If you're looking for accuracy,look elsewhere. This is what happens when advertisers get involved in music education. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Great for elementary music classes! By Paul French I use the little posters all the time with my K-5 general music students. I always keep this packet nearby. I would highly recommend this for any general music teacher, especially those who teach at the elementary level.

(Expressive Art (Choral)). Brighten up your music room with these attractive full-color laminated 9"x12" posters featuring the instruments of the orchestra. Each instrument in the four orchestral families - strings, woodwinds, brass, and percussion - is featured on the front of the poster while the back includes history of the instruments, "fun facts" and representative musical works featuring the instruments. You'll find dozens of uses for this handy resource, including bulletin boards, class discussions, activities and much more! For all ages.
