Great book for young beginner magicians, I would say age 7 and up with help, age 10 and up without. But it's hard to find and expensive when you do find a copy. Fortunately our library had it, but I would buy one if I could get it reasonably.

This book introduces the beginner magician to a variety of card tricks. With step-by-step instructions, readers will learn how to amaze their friends and family. Illustrations and helpful sidebars make card tricks easy to learn and perform.

From School Library Journal Gr 25 Math tricks, sleight of hand, and the old stretchy thumb trick introduce a new generation of little show-offs to the art of magic. Clear, abundant line drawings illustrate the sometimes complicated steps involved in creating illusions involving scarves, coins, string, and, of course, playing cards. Eight tricks per volume will give your junior magicians many starting points to choose from, including at least one confidence-boosting trick that is practically foolproof. The books emphasize practice as an essential element of successful presentation and require no special props; all trick items are easily gathered from home or classroom. Be prepared for levitating forks at the lunch table and coins coming out your ears if you add this set to your collection. From

BooklistThe Beginner Magic series successfully provides an array of tricks with step-by-step instruction that is both easy and fun to follow. The illustrations in some magic books can be puzzling, but these ink-and-color drawings are particularly clear, with two shots often shown to the reader: one depicting what the audience sees, the other the magicians view. Easy Card Tricks has the most complicated tricks of the series, especially when involving shufflingalways a challenge for younger readers. There are simpler tricks, though, where kids just have to deal, cut cards, or use memory skills. Each book features a good introduction, Magic Secrets with advice from real magicians, and boxed helpful tips. The colorful and attractive format makes a point of showing young magicians of various ethnicities, so everybody can get in on the hocus-pocus. Grades 3-6. --Ilene Cooper
