Don McNay has a way about him that makes you laugh (or cry, as appropriate), because he writes about real people and real things that have happened to them and how they handled those things (for good or for ill). This is not just a 'how-to' book (or a 'what to do' book), it is a book about human nature and how people react in certain circumstances. And it isn't just a book about getting some financial advice in certain situations, this book discusses many of the problems our society faces, like poor people being scammed by big banks (many of the same issues Elizabeth Warren and her mother covered in their book, but McNay describes these people from first-hand experience). And, like Elizabeth Warren, he has solutions - a few are tongue-in-cheek, but most are serious and should be taken seriously. In short, I found this book both entertaining and enlightening. So, for a fun read, where you can actually learn something at the same time, you should buy this book. I'm glad I did and will be buying more of Don McNay's books in the future. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Interesting perspective on the illusive lottery win. By Susan D Young. Loved Don's background description of his childhood and how he has developed his experiences into what he has become (in spite of it!). He has proved to be the go-to expert when potential lottery winnings go sky high.

The second book by syndicated columnist and Huffington Post contributor Don McNay touches on two central themes. Lottery winners and McNay's perspective on life as the son of a bookmaker and professional gambler. McNay is a structured settlement consultant who has advised lottery winners and injury victims for over 27 years. He gives step by step advice for those who win a lottery and stories about jackpot winners who "wished they have torn up the ticket." McNay is one of the world's most frequently quoted experts about lottery winners. A native of Northern Kentucky, McNay grew up in an environment where gambling was wide open in the Cincinnati suburbs of Newport and Covington and his father was a major participant. McNay has two Masters Degrees from Vanderbilt University and the American College and is the Eastern Kentucky University Hall of Distinguished Alumni. He has four professional financial designations and is a lifetime member of the Million Dollar Round Table. Located in Richmond Kentucky, McNay founded McNay Settlement Group in 1983 and held national office in the structured settlement industry. His newspaper column is syndicated and appears on the Huffington Post business page. He is a frequent guest on radio and television programs.
